LETS TALK

Like Ed Koch, I frequently ask the question, “How’re we doing?” Mine is not a personal question, not quite a global one, but more or less a national one. My yardstick is more moral than monetary. I tend to fall back on President Kennedy’s standard that, “This country cannot afford to be materially rich and spiritually poor.” That is why I recently reread something called The National Arts Index*, produced by Americans for the Arts, where I learned that attendance at symphonies, museums and professional theaters is down, but international audiences have grown significantly. Philanthropic giving is up, while the art’s share of giving is down. That’s understandable given the needs of a society in recession. Yet oddly, more young people are graduating with a four-year arts degree than ever before. Perhaps that accounts for the 15 percent increase in the number of working artists from 1996 to 2010 (1.9 to 2.2 million). Corporate support of the arts is way down, yet participation in the arts is up. So what’s going on here?

TV’s Norman Lear once said that he’d be a fool to think that his “little situational comedy (All In The Family) could change things. But it created conversation.” Taking a cue from Lear, we at ArtsWestchester decided it was time to start a conversation. The idea was to take the pulse of our community, which, after all, is a microcosm of the country. We wanted to know why so many parents are taking their little girls for ballet lessons, but aren’t going to the ballet? There’s the young professional who tells us that he doesn’t participate, but he sure wants his kids to learn to play an instrument.

Fortunately, the New York State Council on the Arts and the Westchester Community Foundation were on the same page. And so, with their support, we have begun a series of conversations facilitated by Douglas Gould, a strategic communications consultant. Do the arts matter to people? And, if so, why? Recently, I watched a group of cancer survivors forgetting their troubles molding clay. A group of seniors listened with me to a Baroque medley at the Music Conservatory. Latina women are sharpening their English by docenting at the Katonah Museum. Parkinson patients are dancing at the Rye Arts center. You couldn’t hear a pin drop in a packed room at a string concert at the Pleasantville Middle school, while parents and grandparents “qvelled” (beamed proudly).

So, what’s going on? Clearly, as a community, we want the arts in our lives. We value it in our schools, in the way we care for our neighbors and as a life affirming and shared value. But who should pay for it? Those who use it? Or is it a shared value requiring a shared responsibility? We know the arts are good for the economy, with a $156 million impact in Westchester County. Nationally, U.S. exports of arts goods (e.g., movies, paintings, jewelry) increased from $56 to $64 billion between 2009 and 2010, up 12 percent. Former NEA Chair Dana Gioia tells us, “The role of culture...must go beyond economics. It is not focused on the price of things, but on their value.”

Please, join this conversation. Email Joanne Mongelli at JMongelli@ArtsWestchester.org for more information.

Town of Greenburgh

Paint the town red — and every color of the rainbow — at the Town of Greenburgh’s Street Art Festival taking place June 1, at the Hartsdale farmer’s market. Twenty-five to thirty artists will be participating in a street arts painting initiative from 10-4pm. Additionally, the Town of Greenburgh’s annual Music Festival will fill the farmer’s market with tunes every Saturday morning during the summer months. Featured acts can expect publicity via videos of their performances on public access TV. Any musicians or bands interested in performing may contact Town Clerk Judith Beville at jbeville@greenburghny.com. For more info on the Town of Greenburgh’s summer festivals, visit: www.greenburghny.com.

Westchester Choral Society

Experience a concert of legendary classics by George Gershwin and others, together with Rodgers & Hammerstein favorites. Medleys of haunting tunes, toe-tapping rhythms and much-loved piano selections will be presented by the Westchester Choral Society, conducted by Frank Nemhauser, on Sunday, June 2 at Irvington High School. Let nostalgia make your day with a gala reception and silent auction to follow the show. For more info, visit: www.westchesterchoralsociety.org

Comedy Star Robert Klein Comes to White Plains Performing Arts Center

Enjoy a fun-filled night of comedy, theatre and song, when stand-up comedian, singer and actor Robert Klein comes to the White Plains Performing Arts Center on June 1. Klein, who has influenced the likes of comedy stars Jay Leno and Jerry Seinfeld, has been performing since the ’60s. Among his many credits, he hosted his own nighttime talk show, Robert Klein Time, in the late ’80s, has recorded eight live HBO specials, and has appeared in over 40 feature films, including a starring role alongside Adam Sandler and Don Cheadle in the 2007 drama Reign Over Me. Joined by musical director Bob Stein on piano, the duo’s performance will benefit the not-for-profit WPPAC. For tickets and more info, visit: www.wppac.com.

Arts and entertainment just got a big boost in the city of Peekskill. At a May 15 press conference, acting City Manager Brian O. Havranek announced a 17-year agreement between the City of Peekskill and Red House Entertainment for the management and operation of the Paramount Theater, which closed its doors back in October, 2012.

Red House CEO Kurt Heitmann announced that the theater is being rebranded as “Paramount Hudson Valley,” and provided the first lineup of performances for 2013. Upcoming highlights include the Westchester Youth Symphony on June 9; Kiddie Palooza, featuring Louie Miranda on July 13, and a Jazz and Blues Festival, in association with the Peekskill BID on July 27.

“The Paramount is an anchor of downtown,” said BID executive director Jason Angell. “We aim to be the creative capitol of the Hudson Valley and the vision of the Paramount Hudson Valley is a key part of taking the next step.”

The agreement with Red House will also provide Peekskill with a steady revenue stream, compensating the city five percent of adjusted gross income of ticket sales. Red House projects that Peekskill could realize up to $45,000 in the first year and up to $110,000 in the second. Red House will be required to hold 50 shows the first year, half of which must be ticked. Red House will also have the option to renew the 17-year lease for an additional 10 years.

“We’re looking forward to working with the city and the community,” said Heitmann. “It’s a great day for this vintage theater to be reopening in Peekskill and the Hudson Valley.”

In July, the theater will also feature movie nights that include screenings of live events such as classic and rock concerts, opera, and ballet, along with independent and international films. For updated events, calendars, and ticket information, visit: www.paramounthudsonvalley.com.

FEATURED EXHIBITIONS by Dominick Anfiteatro

Clay Art Center: Sana Musasama

Art, social justice and community come together in a new exhibition presented at the Clay Art Center (CAC). Sana Masusama: My Journey, on view until June 22, details Sana’s ceramic sculptures and installations that represent her travels and experiences around the world. The exhibit will include two large scale works from The Maple Tree series, which represents an abolitionist movement; pieces from The Unknown/Unnamed series, which illustrates unidentified lives lost; and work from The Unspokeable series that expresses the violence and healing in women’s lives. Using ceramics as a way to express global cultures and issues, the exhibit involves mostly earthy colors and somber tones that visually connect to the message of the pieces. Ranging from the large standing pieces to mounted wall pieces, there is a good amount of variety that touches upon many different issues. For more info, visit: www.clayartcenter.org.

Hudson River Museum: Frederico Uribe

When everyday material possessions are transformed into exotic animals, interesting trees and other strange pieces of art, you can’t help but observe in wonder. On display from June 1 through August 4, the Hudson River Museum presents Colombian artist Frederico Uribe’s Fantasy River. This 5,000 square foot installation displays the artist’s creativity with bright colors and lively creations. These include flowing “water,” rows of shovel handle “corn,” a suitcase “boat,” and many animals, including birds in flight and galloping horses. Using materials such as leather shoes, books, baby bottles, coins, screws and more, the visual aspect of this fantasy world is also fantastically impressive.

By recycling these materials, he also pays respect to nature by giving books and paper back to “trees” and leather from shoes back to “animals” in a creative way. For more info, visit: www.hrm.org.

PLACEMAKING: RE-ENVISIONING WHITE PLAIN

When real estate gurus talk about a livable city, they mean a city which embraces the notion that green space and art are as vital to a community’s appeal as basic amenities like restaurants and public transportation.

The creation of designated Cultural Districts is an international movement to boost a city’s economic growth while distinguishing it as a place worth coming to visit and staying to live. Inspired by successful initiatives in cities like Pittsburgh and Philadelphia, which used Cultural Districts and public art programs to rejuvenate their streetscapes, ArtsWestchester asked Westchester-based artists and architects to imagine what White Plains could look like with a Cultural District of its own.

The result is “Placemaking: Re-Envisioning White Plains,” which is on view until July 13, and is curated by Nazanin H. Munroe.

The invited artists were asked to examine one-square block in the heart of the city, and envision creative public art projects for key locations. ArtsWestchester’s galleries are full with renderings, scale models, and video projections that represent a wide range of inspiring possibilities for art in the city.

As an example, ArtsWestchester’s bank vault showcases a proposal by Christopher Kaczmarek in which Macy’s Court Street façade is transformed into a movie screen. If realized, local and international, emerging and seasoned artists alike could exhibit their time-lapse visions on the blank wall, bringing new audiences to the city’s center.

“Placemaking: Re-envisioning White Plains” is about starting the conversation about art’s place in White Plains. With Music at Grace Church, the White Plains Performing Arts Center, and ArtsWestchester all within the area of interest, the goal of the proposals is to add to the already vibrant cultural offerings of the neighborhood and create a distinctive streetscape for White Plains’ residents.

“There is an opportunity for developers and city planners to collaborate with artists in innovative ways to build more interesting and functional residential and commercial complexes,” says ArtsWestchester CEO, Janet Langsam.
