ARTS ACHIEVE

by Janet Langsam

Last week, I shouted a “Bravo” to NYC Mayor Bill de Blasio for allocating mega bucks to put art teachers back in the schools in underserved communities. Art teachers are some of the unsung heroes of our education system. Don’t take my word for it. Take the word of NYC Chancellor Carmen Fariña and the Mayor himself. He says that the arts have the ability to help kids be stronger in a whole host of disciplines. Take the word also of national studies that attest to the value of the arts in academic achievement. In a national sample of 25,000 students reported by The Education Commission of the States, those “with high levels of arts-learning experiences” earned higher grades and scored better on standardized tests than those with little or no involvement in the arts, regardless of socioeconomic status. The lack of arts experiences is particularly acute in low income neighborhoods of New York City, according to a recent New York Times article.

This week, a shout out goes to the New York State Assembly for allocating $500,000 to support arts programs in Yonkers schools.

Many professional educators tell us that kids learn in different ways – some by hearing, some by seeing, and some by experimenting in art rooms. These rooms are safe, non-judgmental places where kids are free to take risks and innovate. In these spaces, a work of art is a journey of trial and error and there is no such thing as failure or even a right answer. After all, if everything had a right answer, there would be no need to push boundaries in our society, no need to invent new products, no need to find better ways of doing things, in fact, no need for entrepreneurs. For too long, the arts have been demonized as a frill. Thanks Mayor de Blasio and the NY State Assembly for setting it straight.

Mount Vernon School District Integrates Arts into Its Curriculum

This spring, ArtsWestchester implemented 37 artist residencies in grades 1-3 in the Mount Vernon School District in accordance with a four-year grant through the US Department of Education. This Arts in Education Model Development and Dissemination program is designed to integrate arts education into the core curricula of STEM (science, technology, engineering, math) to strengthen standards-based arts instruction in local elementary schools. These residencies consist of multi-session, hands-on workshops that use the arts as an instructional tool. The grant also supports professional development for these classroom teachers.

Local Students Visit STEAM Exhibition

As part of a recent Arts in Education Model Development and Dissemination program (outlined above), second- and third-grade students from Graham Elementary School recently visited ArtsWestchester’s STEAM exhibition for a gallery tour and arts activity. The visit aimed to further reinforce what students were learning in the classroom through artist residencies.

Bob Roth, a dedicated board member since 2006, has been elected by ArtsWestcher’s Board of Trustees to serve as its Executive Vice President. Roth is currently a member of ArtsWestchester’s Executive, Arts Award, Development, and Facilities/Building committees and is a regular attendee at ArtsWestchester’s many events.

A principal at JMC Consulting, Roth has over 38 years of site planning and engineering experience working with a wide array of national retailers, developers, institutions and more. “Westchester County is a dynamic and beautiful place to live, and the vibrancy of the arts significantly adds to that,” says Roth. Roth and his wife Joyce were born and raised in the county, where they are also raising their daughter Dayna. “I hope I can have a positive impact in whatever small way I can by contributing to the diversity of the arts in the county and helping to make it an even better place to live,” he added. Besides ArtsWestchester, Bob is a member of the Westchester County Association Board of Directors.

A panel will make the final selection of awardees. Each of the 50 artists selected will receive an award of $1,000 and public recognition. A selection of these artists will also be featured in Beyond NYC: A Festival of New Work in Westchester, scheduled for spring 2015.

ARTSWESTCHESTER IS NOW ACCEPTING ARTS ALIVE GRANT APPLICATIONS

Making the arts accessible in all Westchester communities is at the heart of ArtsWestchester’s mission. One of the many ways this goal is met is through the Arts Alive Grants. These funds are available for community-based arts projects, for artists to create new work, as well as for arts education-related projects that partner with local schools. Priority is given to emerging cultural organizations, activities that bring the arts to underserved communities, and projects that engage a broad and diverse audience.

ArtsWestchester will be accepting applications for this year’s Arts Alive grants through Friday, October 17 at 6pm. Grants are awarded in three categories:

- Arts Alive Project Grants provide financial support and technical assistance for projects, with priority given to emerging arts organizations and cultural programs accessible for underserved communities.

- Arts Alive Artist Grants provide direct support to artists in the creation of an original, new work that incorporates the community as context.

- Arts Alive Education Grants (formerly Arts Partner Challenge Grants) support school-based curricula-related arts projects developed by artists or cultural organizations in partnership with public schools.

Arts Alive grants are made possible with funds from the Decentralization Program (DEC), a re-grant program of the New York State Council on the Arts that is administered locally by ArtsWestchester.

TWO VIGILES GET FIRED UP AT CLAY ART CENTER

In Caesar Augustus’ ancient Rome, teams of men called “vigiles” were mandated to enter burned buildings to determine the cause of the blaze. Port Chester has two “vigiles” of its own — artists who consider the effects of wood firing and flame to express their ceramic vision. Two Vigiles, on view from August 2 through September 20, will feature the work of Bruce Dehnert, who experiments with materials for his colorful functional and figurative work, and Shawn O’Connor, who stresses the importance of home and family by using objects for the home in his work. “Making Work for Wood-Firing,” a two-day hands-on workshop led by Shawn O’Connor will be presented. An opening reception will take place on August 2. For more info, visit: www.clayartcenter.org.

ICELAND THROUGH THE EYES OF ITS ARTISTS

Katona Museum of Art (KMA)’s Iceland: Artists Respond to Place is the first U.S. exhibition to focus exclusively on contemporary Icelandic artists. The show, on view through September 28, features 12 artists who reflect on the history, myth, landscapes and resources of their home country of Iceland. “Whether or not we live in the city or country, the natural environment plays a profound role in the way we conduct our daily lives and experience our surroundings,” says KMA Director Darsie Alexander. “Through the lens of these artists, we can approach the powerful terrain of Iceland.” Eggert Petursson’s large tapestry-like paintings focus on the indigenous flora of Iceland. Ragna Robertsdottir uses actual natural resources — lava pumice collected at different volcanic sites in Iceland — to compose her site-specific minimalist wall sculpture. For more info, visit the exhibition website, featuring artist interviews, fun facts and an essay by curator Pari Stave: www.icelandart.org.

THE ART OF ZERO AT NEUBERGER MUSEUM OF ART

After the devastation of WWII, a group of European artists formed the Zero movement, aimed at creating “new art for a new age.” “Zero” represented a zone of silence and endless possibility. This attempt to re-harmonize the relationship between humankind and nature, and to move away from Expressionism, is presented by the Neuberger Museum of Art through September 28. The Art of Zero: Heinz Mack, Otto Piene, Günther Uecker & Friends presents 22 works, never before shown together in context, that use industrial materials and technology to explore light, kinetics and structure in a minimalist practice. For more info, visit: www.neuberger.org.

SCULPTURES TO BEAUTIFY PARK

Peekskill Landing, currently under construction, aims to create a landscaped 4.4 acre waterfront park. It will include a kayak launch, gazebo, natural amphitheater, multi-use trails and public sculptures. Three distinctive sculptural works were chosen through a panel process: Emil Alzamora’s subtle aquatic forms, much like the waterways of the Hudson River, channel the relaxation one can expect to enjoy at the park. Christine Corday gives a nod to the history of the Hudson River, which was formed by ancient ice flows. Jong Oh recalls a time of cheerful leisure that highlights the entertainment that guests might experience at the park. These sculptures will be visible to park-goers, those sailing on the Hudson River, and commuters from the Metro North and Amtrak trains running adjacent to the park, which is scheduled to open to the public in September. “Public art promotes the city as a lively and engaging place to live, work and visit,” according to Mayor Frank Catalina.
