An NEA Update in Pet Parlance

by Janet Langsam, ArtsWestchester CEO

I am trying to wrap my head around a few newsworthy items. One of these is the number and size of dogs jet-setting on airlines. Now I happen to be a dyed in the wool dog lover. So I asked myself what I might do if I was offered a free trip to Hawaii with a 180-pound St. Bernard sitting in the next seat. Would I go? Well certainly, I’d be torn. I would love to take the trip and nix the pooch. But that option wasn’t on the table. Yet, an all-expense trip would be hard to turn down.

The notion of having to make such a major decision would make me feel like I did last week, when I heard that the President signed a $1.3 trillion budget which, in dog parlance, might be similar in size to a St. Bernard. In the budget also was a tiny Chihuahua of an increase for the National Endowment for the Arts (NEA). This for sure was a better choice than the President’s threat to eliminate the NEA. But like most Culture Spaniels, I’m torn. It would be nice, for a change, if the arts community and the airlines could get together on a plan that would make flying a breeze for dog lovers, and culture a point of national significance. Am I dreaming?

Clive Davis Arts Center at Bedford Playhouse

The Bedford Playhouse (BPH) recently announced that legendary music producer Clive Davis has pledged support for the capital campaign that will transform its space. His gift will establish the “Clive Davis Arts Center at Bedford Playhouse,” which will encompass all arts programming that is offered beyond film, including music, theater, art exhibits and stand-up comedy. BPH Founder John Farr says: “The Arts Center will help us to convey that we’re not just a beautifully renovated movie house, but also a vibrant cultural center.” BPH will name a forty-seat theater after the music mogul, and its exterior sign will read “Bedford Playhouse, home of the Clive Davis Arts Center.” The Playhouse plans a partial opening later this spring and a full opening projected for later this year.

Pelham Art Center Appoints Executive Director

Pelham Art Center has appointed Charlotte Mouquin for the role of its Executive Director. Her goal, according to the Center, is to “enhance community through art experiences that highlight our humanity as global citizens.” She said of her new position: “The Pelham Art Center resonates strongly with my principles about bringing art to the public, being a place to engage and educate people about art, and have diverse people and cultures coming together.” Previously, Mouquin was Director of Rush Arts Galleries at Rush Philanthropic Arts Foundation for seven years. The curator and artist will succeed Lynn Honeysett, who has retired.

Library Welcomes Return of Rockwell Painting

New Rochelle Public Library (NRPL) recently welcomed home a painting by iconic American painter Norman Rockwell. Rockwell, who lived and worked in New Rochelle for 25 years, was a long-time supporter of the library. While living in the town, Rockwell was the top cover artist for Saturday Evening Post. His first two-page illustration for the national magazine was The Land of Enchantment.

Four Performing Families Explore Music, Tradition and Family Bonds

On April 21, ArtsWestchester will present “Performing Families,” a sampling of traditions from around the world, through the bonds of music and families – from Jewish folk music (Klezmer) and choral songs of inclusion to South Indian classical (Carnatic) singing and Mexican mariachi. Four family bands will convey a broader understanding of the varied meanings of “family” by discussing the intersections between music and tradition.

Music connects its performers through cultural ties and generational commonalities. Sruli and Lisa perform Klezmer with their sons. This music connects them with their children, but also with past generations, and to future generations who will learn from the melodies their sons carry forth. Of performing with her children, Lisa said: “You are connected. You are a team, a tribe.” Members of the chorus at LOFT LGBTQ Community Center, though not connected through biology, hold a bond that is created through a shared community. The group’s repertoire delivers a message of inclusion, peace and hope. Its director, Zach Wright, said: “For other groups, it’s a cultural tie. For us, it’s important for the younger people to be with older generations that have gone through the same thing as them.”

Shaaranya Pillai initially learned the oral tradition of Carnatic singing from her virtuoso mother Kiruba, whom she now performs with. On the other hand, Leslie Navarro and her brother Christopher, studied traditional mariachi instruments at academy and brought the tradition home to their parents, reversing the conventional succession of cultural progression. Though these two groups formed in different ways, they equally embrace their cultural and familial ties.

Sruli and Lisa’s Family Klezmer Band, LOFT’s Pride Chorus, Kiruba and Shaaranya Pillai and Mariachi Sol Mixteco will each perform and speak of family in ArtsWestchester’s gallery. An audience talk-back will follow. For more info, visit artsw.org/performingfamilies.

Work of Veteran Paparazzo in White Plains

Veteran paparazzo Ron Galella is a man whose persistence and bravado resulted in his work being published in countless publications and exhibited in museums and galleries. This month, the man who captured celebrities’ likenesses from a new perspective will be showcased with a solo exhibition at Atelier 811 Gallery in White Plains. More than 100 photographs in Celebrities: A Look at the Beautiful People will showcase the most renowned people Galella photographed, from Frank Sinatra and Robert Redford to Elizabeth Taylor and Sophia Loren. It will also recall some of the most notable moments of his career. For example, after Marlon Brando broke his jaw, Galella didn’t back down. Instead, he responded by wearing a football helmet to protect his face the next time he photographed the actor. In addition, Jackie Kennedy opened a lawsuit against Galella, who followed her tirelessly in pursuit of the perfect photograph. Despite these tenuous run-ins with celebrities, his reputation grew due to the genuine quality of his photos. They have since been acquired by many museums, including the Metropolitan Museum of Art. Galella, who now lives in New Jersey, once maintained a studio in Yonkers. He will attend the exhibition’s opening reception on April 12. The work will be on view through May 24. For more info, contact 914-419-6252.

A solo exhibition at Philipse Manor Hall State Historic Site in Yonkers this month represents 50 years of work, as expressed through the unique perspectives acquired during extensive traveling by artist Biagio “Gino” Civale. These works represent a career that transitioned through various phases of influence and exploration of artistic techniques, including expressionism, abstracts, and his current inclination toward collage and assemblage. The twelve exhibited works will be on display from April 5 through April 24, with the only theme being that of Civale’s experiences. The works were chosen based on those pieces which have the most meaning to the artist. For instance, a holy Arab preacher in Benghazi, whom he saw when he was only five years old; the face of a Mexican woman who represents the relationship between a human being’s face and the type of life that person has experienced; and a memory of the clear sky on September 11, 2001 that was invaded with smoke from the Twin Towers. Civale has studied extensively around the world, including Italy, France and the United States, and currently has a studio in Yonkers. An opening reception will take place on April 5. For more info, visit civale.org.

Writer Patricia Highsmith’s first novel, Strangers on a Train, became a Hitchcock movie, but it was perhaps her The Talented Mr. Ripley series that made her most famous. It is this iconic character that sets the stage for Australian playwright Joanna Murray-Smith’s Switzerland. The play melds fact with fiction by placing Highsmith in a fictional plot of the type of psychological thriller for which she was famous. The two-actor production will have its New York premiere at Hudson Stage Company this month.

Fifty Years of Inspiration from Artist Biagio Civale on Display in Yonkers

The New York Premiere of a Psychological Thriller at Hudson Stage Company

During her life, Highsmith was known to be eccentric, hostile and a loner who retreated to the Swiss Alps in her later years. This is where Switzerland takes place. The fictional Edward has been sent by Highsmith’s New York publishing agency to convince her to write one last Ripley novel. Biting humor turns to mystery and tension as the two play a tug-of-war of words to determine who will get their way. Directed by Dan Foster, and starring Peggy J. Scott and Daniel Petzold, the play will run from April 20 through May 5 at North Castle Public Library’s Whippoorwill Theatre in Armonk. Hudson Stage Company is offering an “Arts Deal” for a reduced admission price to ArtsWestchester audiences at artsw.org/artsdeals. For more info, visit hudsonstage.com.

Westchester Poetry Festival Tackles Topics of Social Justice

Poetry is often seen as an underrepresented artistic discipline that bares a stigma of not being relatable. Hudson Valley Writers’ Center (HVWC) and The Masters School aim to change that perception this month. For the first time in its 8 years the annual Westchester Poetry Festival, which appropriately takes place during National Poetry Month, will have a theme: poetry of social justice. The two groups are partnering with the goal of broadening audiences beyond their “regulars,” and engaging high school and college students with relevant, poignant works of poetry that speak to their own lives. According to HVWC Program Director Jennifer Franklin, this theme “seemed particularly salient given today’s climate and the way that generation Z, including the Parkland students, are affecting important social change.”

The four-hour celebration of poetry on April 21 will showcase keynote reader Reginald Dwayne Betts, along with four other acclaimed poets: Chris Campanioni, Andrés Cerpa, Nicole Sealey and Anya Krugovoy Silver. Each author was invited to address the theme of social change in a way that was pertinent to their body of work.

The afternoon also includes readings from Masters School students and a Q&A about social justice in literature. The event takes place at Estherwood Mansion on The Masters School campus in Dobbs Ferry. For more info, visit writerscenter.org.

Local Libraries Help to Foster Cultural Life in Westchester

In many communities, libraries are the center of cultural life – a hub for accessible activities that encourage exploration of creative endeavors and education about diverse cultures. Westchester libraries offer cultural and educational arts activities during National Library Week (April 8-14), but also throughout the whole month.

In April alone, these literary walls will house free and affordable film screenings, concerts, exhibitions, poetry readings and workshops throughout the County. For instance, New Rochelle Public Library’s April Vacation Week (April 3-6) provides an opportunity to enrich, engage and entertain children with free programming while local schools are closed. On April 8, Greenburgh Public Library presents a Baroque concert by husband-and-wife violin duo Black Marble. A series of nine artistic workshops at White Plains Public Library, The Artists’ Loft, begins this month as well, with a collection of music, art, dance and writing workshops led by professional teaching artists.

Westchester’s libraries also provide a space for programs that are organized by other local arts groups. Katonah Public Library is the setting for readings hosted by Katonah Poetry Series, which kicks off its spring readings on April 8 with noted Mexican-American poet Mónica de la Torre. North Castle Library’s Whippoorwill Theater is the home of Hudson Stage Company’s professional theatrical productions, such as Switzerland, which opens on April 21. On April 27, the Ossining Documentary and Discussion Series continues at Ossining Public Library. This screening of An Inconvenient Sequel, a film about Al Gore’s battle against climate change, will be followed by a panel discussion. Farther down-county, Harrison Council for the Arts presents an exhibition of the work of wildlife photographer Kenton Gomez, on view at Harrison Public Library from April 8 through May 5.

Libraries continue to contribute to the quality of life for residents throughout the year with upcoming events such as a ComicCon at Mount Vernon Public Library in June, a celebration of Caribbean culture at Greenburgh Public Library, free flamenco workshops at Warner Library and more. To find your local Westchester library, visit: westchesterlibraries.org.
Through May 15, Hudson Valley Center for Contemporary Art (HVCCA) presents Bleeding Edge, an exhibition that features artists who examine the problematic relationship between humans and technology. The exhibition, which is named after a term for new technologies that have a high risk of failure, will explore how global networks affect the ways in which people express intimacy, identity and history.

The works in Bleeding Edge will highlight instances in which technology fails to sustain human experience. For instance, artist Faith Holland’s photography series Queer Connections challenges the heteronormative naming of wires, which are normally separated as “male” and “female,” by using nail polish as an adhesive for unexpected unions. Kelsey Brod explores identity by revealing how the language of software retains today’s racial and gendered hierarchies. Izabela Gola includes characters in her vignettes that are ignorant of the digitized limbo they inhabit. Amanda Turner Pohan uses discarded computer monitors to hint at the growing obsolescence of the technology, as well as the aging state of its owner. Anthony Antonellis’ GIF-inspired video-works comment on the curatorial challenges of exhibiting art that is created for the internet. Eleanor King uses Google Maps to explore the wilderness that surrounds an Inuit village in northern Canada, but realizes that the computerized illustrations of the landscape are only a reminder of government surveillance and hydrocarbon exploration.

Also on display at HVCCA this spring is an exhibition, Pop Revolution, that displays collage works by legendary artist Cey Adams. The exhibition, on view from April 14 through June 8, explores corporate branding within contemporary culture. Adams layers imagery and paper elements to reinterpret recognizable brand logos from the 60s and 70s, such as Pan Am and KFC. His works invite the viewer to examine their own relationship to these iconic brands that have shaped American culture. For more info, visit hvcca.org.

Revealing Marginalized Groups Through Clay Artworks

In its current THEY exhibition, the Clay Art Center (CAC) in Port Chester engages eight ceramic artists whose works, by examining social topics like race, religion and legal status, give a voice to marginalized individuals. The Center worked with artist and activist Robert Lugo, whose artworks pull elements of hip-hop, history and politics into formal ceramic vessels, and asked him to invite seven other artists to participate in the show. According to Lugo, the works in the show encourage the “employment of empathy instead of competition” when it comes to our differences as a society.

The other exhibited artists include: Jennifer Ling-Datchuk, Christina Erives, Kahlil Irving, Lauren Sandler, Malcolm Mobutu-Smith, Courtney Leonard, and Nathan Murray. Each artist presents ceramics in a way that retains accountability while bringing awareness to oppression: inspired by urban environments, Mobutu-Smith interjects racially-charged imagery into his pieces as a way of adding to a conversation about how the arts can be a platform for activism and change; Sandler considers our assumptions of what “normal,” “beauty” and “worth” look like as she addresses those who are overlooked; and Erives’s work stems from her Mexican heritage and the fear that traditions will be lost to new generations.

An opening reception will take place on April 7. THEY will be on view through May 26. An April 29 symposium will offer a panel, moderated by Lugo, which will discuss social justice issues while also examining how art can be a catalyst for conversation. The exhibition is among four taking place throughout CAC’s year. Each of these four exhibitions will follow a theme of examining social justice and maneuvering life within a global society.
