“History got under my skin.” That’s the way Waddell Stillman explains his 27-year stint at Historic Hudson Valley (HHV), first as CFO and now as President and CEO. It’s what led him and his team to develop a groundbreaking education program about slavery in the Colonial North. People Not Property is an interactive website and documentary now available online. It stitches together videos, interviews, reenactments and hundreds of artifacts and documents into a sobering narrative of slavery at Philipsburg Manor, the historic site in Tarrytown under the aegis of HHV. The location has been well known as a thriving milling and trading complex in 1750 and now incorporates the stories of the 23 slaves who worked there.

With a successful career in finance, it’s improbable that Stillman set out to rewrite history. He came to HHV to tackle budgetary matters. Yet, perhaps there was the soul of a historian in his DNA. His father was a published historian and a great believer in primary sources. Those (by the way) are documents that go right to the heart of a matter. His mother was a Southern gal from North Carolina. Race relations, he says, seemed to be a frequent topic at the dinner table.

It’s never been clear to me whether we get to choose our life’s work, or a life’s work chooses us. But thanks to Waddell Stillman’s, HHV will be a potent voice in our national conversations about race.

MUST-SEE PUBLIC ART:
NEW ROCHELLE

Almost everything is special about the mission and work of Project Blackboard, the non-profit begun by former Iona College basketball player Dan Peterson that revives public basketball courts through dynamic murals by an impressive roster of artists. However, the New Rochelle initiative unveiled in October is particularly meaningful for its founder.

“The Lincoln Park project is special to me because it represents my roots both as an athlete and as the founder of Project Backboard,” Peterson tells ArtsNews. “I used to play on that court while I was in college and my family is still in the New Rochelle.”

Thanks to Mayor Noam Bramson, through a partnership with the city’s Parks and Recreation Department and the New Rochelle Basketball Association, with support from the NBA Players Association and New York State, Project Backboard commissioned Brooklyn-based artist Scott Albrecht to bring his signature geometric style to the colorful facelift.

“Albrecht is one of the first artists I identified as a dream collaborator in the early days of Project Backboard,” Peterson says. “The Lincoln Park renovation was the culmination of almost three years of work and it is something I hope will be enjoyed for a long time.”

Through Albrecht’s art, regulars and newcomers both have the opportunity to discover this beloved space with fresh eyes. It will be hard to know who is drawing those ohhs and ahhs at this summer’s Lincoln Park Summer Classic – the teams or their backdrop.

PRIDE OF PLACE

THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE STONEWALL UPRISINGS CELEBRATES COURAGE, COMMUNITY & COMMITMENT
There had been instances of powerful pushback and protests regarding gay rights prior to the events that unfolded over the course of several days at the Stonewall Inn in Greenwich Village in June 1969. Yet, the episode at the welcoming spot for New York City’s underground gay community did more to galvanize the LGBTQ collective call for equal civil rights and protection than any action that had preceded it. As we mark the 50th anniversary of the uprising this June, we recall the impact of that watershed moment.

Police raids on gay bars were commonplace in the late ‘60s and included identification checks as well as sex verification. However, what happened at the Stonewall Inn in response to an early morning detention on Saturday, June 28 was unexpected. Patrons refused to show ID or submit to go with officers to undress, which had long been the practice.

Tension between patrons and police rose as the standoff ensued, with participants reporting assaults by patrolmen. People placed under arrest waited for wagons to pick them up – homosexuality was a crime. Customers not under arrest were released but, instead of exiting quickly and quietly as expected, they gathered outside and attracted a crowd, which grew exponentially in little time. Gay, lesbian and transgender men and women fought back in a series of demonstrations and riots that would continue for several days.

Stonewall made people, long hiding in the shadows, visible and a public community formed. Stonewall inspired members of that community to stand up to police during subsequent raids until they stopped. Stonewall brought gay rights to mainstream America. Stonewall marked the start of affirming human sexuality as healthy and natural. And from the pain of Stonewall emerged 50 years of Pride.

It wasn’t just the sold-out performance by Leyla McCalla at Caramoor Center for Music and the Arts in April that drew audience cheers. The Katonah cultural powerhouse unveiled the months-long makeover of its flagship building, the Rosen House, and set a standard for the art of spring cleaning.

After sandblasting, the 16th-century Italian gates, which were rusting and flaking, were returned to their former glory. They now stand proud as the clean, deep gray welcoming entrance to the Rosen House.

Once inside the updates continue. A new HVAC system and a floor refurbishing were just the start in the Music Room. Cleaning the stucco walls and ceiling proved to be painstaking work. Conservators peeled away years of dirt, dust and smoke. The red damask and velvet valances were mended and cleaned, as well as the Caldwell Gate. Historian and decorator Thomas Jayne rearranged the art and furniture collection.

The formal dining room received much-needed repairs to cracks in the mantel, a new HVAC system and UV shades to preserve the wallpaper. Fresh coats of paint and new carpets freshen up the relocated Visitors Services Center and the Box Office.

While tackling La Loggia bedroom, conservators discovered a moss green section, which they believe to be the original color of the walls when the Rosens were in residence. Returning the walls to that shade was an easy decision. You can see it now, as well as a small, unfinished patch that illustrates the layers of history, much like the Grand Central Station ceiling swath recalls it’s pre-renovation appearance.

“Our goals for the work we completed last winter were to restore the room to its original luster and to expand our programming capabilities for the future. We are very excited that we were able to install air conditioning so that we can now comfortably use the room from May through September,” says Caramoor CEO Jeff Haydon. “Of course, undertaking restoration work in a historic space can yield its own challenges. While we were cutting the holes in the two-foot concrete slab floors for vents, we encountered more than a dozen old electrical pipes that were unmarked on any old plans. Each one had to be carefully inspected and re-routed.”

You can take a sneak peek during the ever-popular series of summer concerts, which opens June 20 with Timor Andres on piano in the Spanish Courtyard.

History is a powerful thing. It is undeniable. However, sometimes it may be hidden for a while or just overlooked, or even ignored as if it didn’t exist. Take for example the history of Philipsburg Manor in Tarrytown. It is recorded in the archives of the New York Public Library in bold 18th Century script that the Philips family were slave owners. The primary source for this conclusion is a seemingly innocuous document called an Inventory, dated 1750, listing the possessions of arguably the richest merchant in New York State. Pages one and two lists the 23 individuals who were possessions of the Philips family: they were slaves.

Caesar was one of them. He was a seasoned miller whose indenture along with the other laborers made the Philips family enormously wealthy. These people were recorded not because of their significant deeds but simply because they were an item on a list of one man’s possessions.

Philipsburg Manor was acquired in 1951 by Sleepy Hollow Restorations, now Historic Hudson Valley (HHV). Philanthropist John D. Rockefeller Jr. funded the restoration and it was opened to the public as a historic tourist destination. Its narrative was the story of a wealthy colonial entrepreneur who surrounded himself with the finest of Dutch and English furniture and antiquities. All of these possessions were meticulously researched, recreated and authentically presented in the manor as they are described in the list of possessions articulated on pages three and four of the Inventory.

Now, if truth be told, there were slaves who tended the farm, milled the flour and prepared the goods for an active triangular trade business between the Colonies, West Indies and England and it has been rewritten by HHV as a means of educating the public, especially children about slavery in our nation.

Under the leadership of President and CEO Waddell Stillman, and the board of HHV, a new narrative has been written and unveiled with the help of the National Endowment of the Humanities (NEH). The truth is that the life at Philipsburg Manor, long extolled as a model of congenial colonial history, is now a potent primer on slavery in the United States. People Not Property sheds light on a practice in this country that denied freedom to thousands.

The groundbreaking interactive documentary website launched in May reveals the history of slavery in the colonial North. A mix of original videos, interviews, reenactments and infographics, as well as photos, illustrations, and hundreds of artifacts and documents tell the wrenching stories of America’s history of slavery in the northern colonies.

AMERICAN ROOTS MUSIC FESTIVAL
CARAMOOR CENTER FOR MUSIC AND THE ARTS
SAT., JUNE 22 ALL DAY

This will be an amazing music event. The Milk Carton Kids and Amythyst Kiah are the evening acts. The daytime shows, beginning at noon, will feature Deva Mahal, Bumper Jacksons, Rainbow Girls, Youth In A Roman Field, Oliver the Crow, Damn Tall Buildings, Porch Stomp Revue, Our Band, Bethlehem and Sad Patrick, Square Dance! and With Porch Stomp Revue — too many to describe in a short concert preview. The roots duo Milk Carton Kids is by now famous, with singers and acoustic guitarists Kenneth Pattengale and Joey Ryan engaging in wonderful instrumental interplay and harmonies. At times, they remind us of the Everly Brothers, with Appalachian inspired acoustic guitar instrumentation (a la David Rawlings of the Gillian Welch duo) and yet other times hints of Simon & Garfunkel. Amythyst Kiah, multi-instrumentalist and singer, is one of the powerful women rising. She recently joined Rhiannon Giddens and Leyla McCalla in the super group Our Native Daughters. Eyes and ears are upon her as one of the new generation of young women who are reviving African American roots music traditions. The daytime performers promise to showcase amazing talent of up-and-coming roots musicians whose styles range from bluegrass to folk. Check out their YouTube clips because there will be eye opening surprises. Look for Oliver the Crow and Damn Tall Buildings to make a big statement. My unabashed favorite is the Rainbow Girls, a fun, eclectic trio comprised of three unique musical talents from the golden countryside just north of California’s Bay Area — Vanessa May, Erin Chapin, and Caitlin Gowdey. Another artist who promises to be sensational is soul/R&B chanteuse Deva Mahal. This will be a great day and evening for musical discovery and adventure.

Pete Seeger Celebration at Clearwater

The Clearwater Festival, one of the country’s largest annual music and environmental celebrations, returns to Croton Point Park this Father’s Day weekend, June 15 and 16. Founded in 1966 by the late folk singer and activist Pete Seeger, the Clearwater Festival was inspired by his mission to clean up the Hudson River. It raises money for the Hudson River Clearwater sloop and organization, which provides environmental research, education and advocacy to help preserve and protect the river and its tributaries. This year, the Clearwater Festival, also known as the Great Hudson River Revival, marks Seeger’s centennial birthday and the 50th anniversary of the flagship with diverse music, dance, educational and family-friendly programs. Gospel singer Mavis Staples and folk singer-songwriter Ani DiFranco headline on Saturday, followed by Railroad Earth and legendary reggae band The Walters on Sunday. The Mammals, Tom Paxton and the DonJuans, Joel Rafael, Tom Chapin and numerous others join the eclectic lineup of more than 70 performers. Festival guests can also explore the vendor and exhibitor areas, including a juried Handcrafters’ Village, showcasing more than 50 crafters and the Working Waterfront offering small boat exhibits and rides. There will be hands-on environmental educational activities at the Green Living Expo and Discovery and Tideline Tents. An artisanal food and farmer’s market rounds out this two-day event with everything sourced from the Hudson Valley. For more info, visit clearwaterfestival.org
Ballet Hispánico, the premier Latino dance organization in the United States, performs three works at the Emelin Theatre on June 8. Sombrerísimo, choreographed by Annabelle Lopez Ochoa, is inspired by the surrealist world of Belgian painter René Magritte. In Con Brazos Abiertos, choreographer Michelle Manzanares explores iconic Mexican symbols she was reluctant to embrace as an immigrant growing up in Texas. In Danzón, choreographer Eduardo Vilaro takes the traditional Cuban titular dance form and reinvents it with contemporary language in a joyous celebration.

WILD ROSE

There is so much to feel about this wonderful and multidimensional film. Certainly for those who love country music, the singing is soulful and gorgeous and shows that the "country" in country can be many places. For those who feel torn between a sometimes harsh reality of real life and the goal of living your dream, Wild Rose will certainly touch you emotionally. For mothers who have struggles with daughters, want them to be all they can be on every level, and yet also search for personal meaning amidst life’s disappointments, there is a tug on the heartstrings. And for “grannies” whose love for grandchildren overrides so much ... not much more to say here.

The best part is that there is triumph in this film and rewards and hope. So, whatever level this movie strikes your heart (and it will), you will leave with a wonderful (country) song in it.

Good Things To Believe In...

We Believe in Sustainability

“Green” companies make good neighbors. Curtis Instruments is helping to make the world greener by designing and manufacturing technology for zero-emission electric vehicles. Did you know that there are more electric off-road electric vehicles in use worldwide than electric cars? Think of electric golf cars, forklifts, airport vehicles, aerial work platforms, floor care machines, and even electric wheelchairs. Curtis provides the instrumentation, vehicle control systems and related technology to drive and operate these EVs, plus light-on-road cars. Headquartered in Mount Kisco since 1960, we were “green” long before it was a buzzword. Worldwide, we’re a technology leader in our field. Locally and globally, we’re working to make the world a better place.
